Boreal Ties: Photographs and Two Diaries of the 1901 Peary Relief Expedition

In 1899 Robert Peary, exploring northern Greenland in search of the North Pole, lost seven toes to frostbite but refused to cut his exploration short to seek treatment. When his wife learned of his condition, she and their seven-year-old daughter set off in July 1900 to find Peary and persuade him to come home. The 1901 expedition documented in this fascinating new book was organized to deliver supplies to Peary and to search for his wife and child. The book comprises the annotated diaries and photographs of two participants in the expedition, Clarence Wyckoff and Louis Bement, close friends from Ithaca, New York who paid $500 each to join the voyage. Wyckoff and Bement embarked looking forw

What others say about this ebook:

Review 1:

Wonderful compilation of photos and words from another epoch. Such a picture of "white civilisation" encountering "the natives"! Fascinating.

Review 2:

I used Boreal Ties by Kim Fairley Gillis (editor) to research two of my own books set in the Arctic. What an invaluable resource this book was to me, what a find! The journals contain intriguing references to Frederick Cook, Matthew Henson, Robert E. Peary, Josephine Peary (and most pertinent to my own research, Marie Peary, and the Inuk girl known as ?Billy Bah?). Most importantly, the stories of these famed Arctic explorers, and the native people with whom they came in contact, are told photographically through unique, absolutely gorgeous, and technically outstanding photographs. The images in this book represent the absolute best of historic Arctic photography; in my opinion they are as excellent as Ernest Shackleton?s images taken in the Antarctic.

The photos and journals in Boreal Ties were created, remarkably, by two New York businessmen, Clarence Wyckoff and Louis Bement, who journeyed to the Arctic as what we would call today ?adventure tourists.? Robert E. Peary?s ship Windward, carrying among other passenger?s Peary wife and daughter, did not return to America as expected in the summer of 1900. So the follow summer Peary?s financial backers in New York arranged for a relief party, journeying to the Arctic on the steamer Erik to investigate. Paying a fee of $500 each, Wyckoff, 25, one of Peary?s supporters and a manufacturer of typewriters, and a friend, Bement, 35, a salesman of hats and caps, joined the expedition.

The businessmen endured maggots in their soup, hives, and head lice. Three weeks into the journey all the meat on ship went rotten and had to be thrown overboard. More than once, the Erik?s incompetent crew almost steered the ship into mountain-sized icebergs.

The businessmen traveled with multiple cameras, the latest and best Eastman Kodak had to offer. Though not professional photographers, Wyckoff?s and Bement?s unique images far exceed Peary?s own photographs both in technical and artistic qualities. While the adventure tourists enjoyed nearly three months of intense sunshine, Peary often took his tripod and old glass plate cameras out in typically poor Arctic weather. After the voyage, the friends pasted copies of each other?s prints into their scrapbooks; in some cases they annotated who took the photograph, and in other cases not. These men left a fascinating legacy.

For anyone keenly interested in Arctic exploration, Boreal Ties is a must-read.
